Juergen Eisermann is a three-time marathon runner, indicative of his competitive nature, his love of physical fitness and a focus on long-term projects and goals.

As founder and director of the South Florida Institute for Reproductive Medicine, his business and professional goals have the same long-term motivations: to increase the success rates for infertility treatment and to reduce both risks and costs to his patients.

His biggest professional challenge as a physician has been to determine and master minimally invasive surgery techniques through extensive study, training and their innovative implementation.

Active in both civic and professional organizations, Eisermann is a voluntary assistant professor at the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine and a fellow of the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology. In 2003, he won the Distinguished Member Award from the German American Chamber of Commerce.

"What I like most about my industry is the consistent advances that allow for better outcomes each year, in particular, higher pregnancy rates for infertile couples," Eisermann said.

From a single location, the reproductive technology program has grown to three locations within the tri-county area.
